

Tuesday: Meeting in the air

In the morning, we went from Meran to Teslano by bus and there we met in our committees for the first time. In these committees we had three different workshops. In the first one, Regula Imhof from the Alpine Convention informed us about lobbying and networking by discussing our own networks in small groups. Workshop number two was about identity in general but also about what we understand under the word identity and what identity does mean to each one of us. And last but not least, workshop number three. This workshop should help us to get into our topics and to decide in which direction we want to lead our discussions in the following days.

After that we had the chance to go to a climbing park. This was really funny but at the beginning I was terrified because of the height and also because everything was moving. After this adventure we had lunch in a Pizzeria, where we had the choice between roast, "geschnetzeltem" and a vegetarian dish. The food was quite good, but we had to hurry because we had already a delay in the timetable.

After lunch, we went back to Meran where we first entered the "FOS-Marie Curie School". We waited until all the delegates changed the clothes and then we divided into the different committees. The pupils of the school guided us to the town, so we could see some of the sights like the theatre and the Therme. Afterwards, the coach fetched us and brought us to the village of Tyrol. Our feet already hurt, but we had to walk for another 30 minutes to the castle. The sun was still shining, so we had an amazing view. In the castle we had a short committee-meeting and then we all went to the Knight's Hall. Some well-known politicians among others held short speeches about the importance of the YPAC. After another hour, we eventually had dinner offered as a buffet. We walked back at 8:30 pm and all-in-all I've to admit we had an amazing day with a lot of new experiences.
